317th AG family named Dyess' best

By Senior Airman Matthew Rosine Dyess Public Affairs

A 317th Airlift Group family was recognized as the 2004 Dyess Family of the Year during the 39th Annual World's Largest Barbecue at the Abilene Civic Center Saturday.

While Tech. Sgt. Michael 40th Rogers, Airlift Squadron, was deployed at the time of the barbecue, his wife, Kari, their daughter, Katie and their son, Dean, were on-hand and pleasantly surprised when they heard the announcement during the lunchtime meal.

"I'm just shocked," Kari said. "I really don't feel like we do any more than anyone else in the squadron. This is such a surprise."

A panel of judges from Dyess and the city of Abilene evaluated three families nominated from the base to determine the winner. The judges read a package on each family including inforgrowth of each family member and how the family has extended friendship and service to others in the military and civilian community.

As a family, the Rogers' are active participants both in their church as well as squadron activities. Kari is a key spouse, while Michael is a member of the unit advisory council. The children also help out at the unit snack

"We like helping at the snack bar," said Katie and mation about the individual Dean. "We get free snacks when we are done helping."

While the Rogers family's selection comes as a bit of a shock to them, it comes as no surprise to those who have seen them in action around Dyess.

"The Rogers Family is well deserving of this award," said Lt. Col. D.B. Chandler, 40th Airlift Squadron commander. "They go above and beyond every day making not only The Screaming Eagles better, but all of Dyess and the Big Country."

The Rogers family poses with the official party after receiving their award at the World's Largest Barbecue.

Chris Young, head of the World's Largest Barbecue's kitchen staff prepares one of two 25-gallon pots of barbecue sauce. In addition to the sauce, this year's barbecue used 3,500 pounds of brisket, 600 pounds of smoked sausage, 600 pounds of coleslaw, 50 pounds of onions and 60 gallons of pickles.

Traffic-safety courses target vehicle fatalities

By Staff Sgt. Melanie Streeter Air Force Print News

WASHINGTON Force safety officials are unveiling four new trafficsafety programs in the comfatalities in the last four years.

"While no age, gender or rank group is immune to vehicle crashes, statistically speaking, our most at-risk population is young enlisted (Airmen)," said Chief Master Sgt. Clifford Tebbe, Air Force Safety Center ground safety superintendent.

While airmen basic through senior airmen make up 37 percent of the service's workforce, they are the victims in 64 percent of fatal motor-vehicle crashes, Chief Tebbe said.

"They need to hear three things," he said. "They're at risk, risk is manageable, and (they must) manage risk responsibly whenever and wherever they encounter it."

The first course, slated for release by May 1, is Introductory Traffic Safety, to be followed this summer by a course targeting supervisors.

By late summer, the Intermediate Traffic Safety ing months to battle the Course should be available, steady increase of traffic with production for the final course beginning in August or September, Chief Tebbe said.

> "This three-stage approach places traffic-safety and risk-management concepts before Airmen three times in their first 14 to 18 months of service," he said. "The added supervisory piece is absolutely vital -they're our first line of detection and defense."

> Traffic-safety courses are not new to the Air Force, but these programs differ from their predecessors in several key areas, the first being focus.

> "The Air Force has a very robust database portraying our mishap experience,' Chief Tebbe said.

AF Secretary outlines top priorities, future goals

By Staff Sgt. Elaine Aviles 39th Air Base Wing Public Affairs

INCIRLIK AIR BASE, Turkey -- The Air Force's top civilian focused on Air Force priorities, the war on terrorism and future goals April 14.

"People, of course, are the number-one priority," said Dr. James G. Roche, secretary of the Air Force. "Any organization is only as Loss, we had a lot of Airmen effective as the people in it. We do a lot of things for our Airmen, not because we're philanthropic, but because we believe (we) have a dynamic Air Force, we have to invest in our Airmen."

The first step to ensuring this investment is well spent is to streamline the force.

"We're 16,000 Airmen in excess," Secretary Roche said. "After we lifted Stop-who didn't want to leave. We have to re-evaluate our normal annual loss and gain, as well as our bonuses and re-enlistment decisions. That's smart business. Airmen are a very valuable resource, and one that costs money."

Secretary Roche said leaders plan on taking the force and reorienting it to a future in air and space.

"To keep the Air Force effective and efficient, we have to look at what the nation will be asking of us 10, 20 [or] 30 years from now, or next week," he said. "We have to look at our core competencies and what we expect the nation will ask, and stay focused."

This vision includes taking practical measures now and in the near future, Secretary Roche

The Action Line provides a direct line of communication between Col. Jonathan George, 7th Bomb Wing commander, and the people of Dyess. As a general rule, people should use their chain of command or contact the agency involved first, however, if you are not satisfied, call 696-3355 or e-mail action@dyess.af.mil and leave your message. Leaving your name and phone number ensures you will receive a personal reply by phone. The Peacemaker staff reserves the right to edit all incoming Action Lines before publication. Not all Action Lines may be published.

Currently, bicyclists on base are required to wear an American National Standards
Institute certified helmet. If she had been in uniform, she would have had the additional requirement of wearing reflective clothing from 30 minutes before sunset until 30 minutes after sunrise.

Bicycles, when on a road, are considered a vehicle by the Texas Department of Transportation and must have a light on the front of the bike and a red reflector on the back, visible from 500 feet. An additional red light may be affixed to the rear of the bike for visibility, but it will not take the place of a reflector.

Your concerns bring to light a two-part problem regarding both motorcyclists and bicyclists: the visibility of cyclists and the awareness of four-wheeled vehicle operators of their presence. Many visible, rule-following cyclists have encountered dangerous situations, simply because a motor vehicle operator failed to recognize they were on the road. Our 7th Bomb Wing safety office is currently revising Air Force Instruction 91-207, "The U.S. Air Force Traffic Safety Program," and adding any additional requirements for bicyclists will be discussed before its completion.

COACH'S CORNER

Excellence in all we do -- not only is it an Air Force core value, but it is one that is largely practiced here at Dyess. I recently had the opportunity to travel to an awards ceremony in Washington D.C. where our 7th Aircraft Maintenance Squadron won the 2003 Air Force Maintenance Effectiveness Award. This award tells us that we have the best maintenance squadron in the entire AF. The 7th AMXS is the best in what they do which is keeping our B-1's mission and combat ready.

Mission ready is not always an easy task, yet the 7th AMXS, which happens to be our largest squadron and also among the newest, has persevered and come together as a team to win. A squadron of this size lends itself to many leadership challenges -- challenges which have been met and overcome in a bold fashion. Congratulations to our 7th AMXS and to Team Dyess who helped carry them to this achievement of excellence.

Being liked or leading -- which is your preference?

By Lt. Col. Chester Linnes

7th Medical Support Squadron commander

Do you prefer to be liked or lead? Ideally, there is a union of both, but at times leadership requires placing "likeability" on the back burner. Consider this scenario.

You have just been placed in charge of a squadron that has ranked in the bottom of all command-wide metrics for the past 12 months.

Fitness scores are abysmal.

Suspenses are rarely

Travel card delinquencies have steadily increased. Military and civilian workers come to work at their choosing.

The list is long. Now you are on board and clearly see that corrective measures are needed.

But there is a problem.

The person you replaced was well-liked. She received high marks on the unit climate assessment that was conducted before her departure. They commented she was fun and never put pressure on anyone. She was always ready with an entertaining story.

Looking closer at the results, you note that while people enjoyed being around her, there was discontent with professionalism, work quality and accountability.

What do you do?

After all, it will soon be your time to be evaluated. If you are not sure what to do, here's a hint: lead.

Through word and deed, you insist that unit members exercise.

Still missing suspenses? Let's chat about it.

Oh, before you go to finance to discuss mandatory pay deductions for your delinquent travel card bills, let's take care of some disciplinary paperwork. Don't worry; it won't derail your career. And I bet we can all come to work on time.

You discover that the underground grumbling is intense because of your actions, but you stay the course.

Your squadron's metrics slowly begin to move up and you find out -- again by way of the underground-- members like it.

They appreciate not being at the bottom of the heap. Then you get the phone call. It's time for your climate assessment.

You get the results and are struck by some of the personal comments. Remarks such as he's too serious, doesn't smile or takes action too fast are many. Once again you look closer at the results. Although you don't score high on the "likeability" scale, squadron members acknowledge increased pride in their work, greater professionalism, fairness and more team effort.

Being liked or leading -- what is your preference? It's terrific when others find you personally appealing, but when the success of your squadron, people and mission is in question, the choice should be clear.

Each, every line supervisor, commander must recognize obligation to train, mentor people

By Lt. Col. Patrick Mordente 39th Airlift Squadron commander

Mentorship is the lifeblood of the United States Air Force.

It enables today's seasoned professionals to pass on lessons learned to the next generation.

The importance of mentorship was recently addressed by Secretary Roche during remarks at Bolling Air Force Base, Md., when he stated, "I cannot emphasize enough how important it is to our continued operational success to give something back to this great organization, our

Air Force. One of the basic leadership principles of any successful team is the investment of time and energy in properly preparing successive generations."

These words could not ring more true to me and my staff than right now as the 317th Airlift Group fights America's global war on terrorism from our deployed location. The success of our aircrews in combat hinges on our ability to train and prepare the next generation of aviators and maintainers.

Each day my senior staff and I are inspired by our young Airmen's Herculean efforts to keep the mission moving.

Their unwavering devotion to duty, selfless service and performance serves to heighten our sense of duty and responsibility as Air Force leaders.

We recognize, as senior officers and NCOs, we must shape and provide an environment in which they, our Airmen, can be successful.

That environment must include their professional development and maturation as America's warriors.

Each and every line supervisor and commander must recognize their obligation to train and mentor their peo-

Leaders should dedicate themselves daily to the service of their Airmen. We owe it to our Air Force, and we owe it to our nation.

Dyess Air Force Base's Air Traffic Control Tower and Base Operations teams were honored by being named "Best in Air Force" in 1997. Both entities were a part of the 7th Operations Support Squadron.

By Gen. Hal M. Hornburg Air Combat Command command

Air Combat Command commander

For today's warrior, information overload is a common occurrence and the amount of e-mail we receive -- and send -- must be reduced.

Specifically, the time spent opening, reading, sorting, and filing e-mail is becoming unmanageable. That's why I asked the ACC Administrative Communications office to develop the "Commander's Guide to Managing E-mail," which can be found at www2.acc.af.mil/library.

E-mail is an effective tool for accomplishing a diverse set of tasks in an expedient manner. However, there is a time and use for every tool and e-mail cannot replace face-to-face communications for critical issues -- there's no such thing as "digital leadership."

How commanders use e-mail to perform the mission will set the tone for the unit. If you accomplish activities primarily through e-mail and apply good business rules and practices, your troops will follow.

The guide contains my "top ten" list on e-mail and includes professional courtesies and military etiquette rules to follow. It also contains useful tips about maintaining folders and step-bystep instructions on using rules and wizards for managing important correspondence. From our senior leadership to the newest Airman, we must streamline our use of e-mails to accomplish the mission without spending the bulk of our time behind the computer. All Air Force warriors should use this guide to apply good business rules and practices, standardizing our use of e-mail.

I challenge all Airmen to review this guide and develop effective rules and practices for using e-mail.

HI-TECH HUNTERS

Dyess photographers capture base mission, people in a flash

By Airman 1st Class Kiley Olds Dyess Public Affairs

Moving into position, armed only with his weapon of choice, the Airman lines up the target between his sights.

His target moves right where the shooter wants him. With a steady hand and an audible click, he takes his shot. A blinding flash follows and it's all over.

Armed with only a camera and a flash, this troop is one of Dyess' six visual information flight photographers.

Before becoming an expert shot with a camera, Dyess' photographers begin their journey with a 13-week trip to the Defense Information School at Ft. Meade, Md., where they must "survive" the Basic Still Photography Course.

While at DINFOS, the green photographers learn the basics of photography. "(They learn) black and white, color photography, studio photography, film-processing and digital and conventional photographic procedures," said Staff Sgt. Kristin Conway, 7th Communications Squadron visual information flight NCO-in-charge of still photography.

Once the apprentice photographer emerges from training, they continue to polish their newfound skills.

Photos courtesy of the 7th Communications Squadron Visual Information Flight Senior Airman Ryan Summers prepares a flash unit before a studio portrait photoshoot. Overall, Dyess' six visual information photographers take more than 14,000 photos per year.

They do this by shooting studio photography, base visits by distinguished visitors and award, retirement, NCO and chief master sergeant induction ceremonies, Sergeant Conway said.

"Dyess' visual information flight photographers are important because they provide images to the base paper and the base Web site, which individuals are able to download for personal use," Sergeant Conway said. "These images can then be used to improve morale."

While Dyess' photo support remains steady, these digital sharpshooters often take their expertise on the road.

Occasionally, nearby opportunities emerge, such as photographing the base honor guard when they travel to the Dallas metro area, Sergeant Conway said. In addition, deployments and temporary duty assignments offer base photographers the opportunity to continue sharpening their skills.

While an Air Force photographer might not pick up an actual weapon while in combat, he or she carries a weapon of a different kind.

Armed, ready and loaded with digital "bullets," Dyess' hi-tech photo warriors use their weapon of choice to shoot the Air Force's story -- bringing it to life for the military, local community and the rest of the world.
